About Jasmin Eberle

A Science Graduate Turned Oral Health Professional

Jasmin Eberle's path to oral health therapy is shaped by a strong academic foundation across two of Australia's leading universities. She first completed a Bachelor of Science at Monash University — one of Australia's Group of Eight research universities — before pursuing her passion for health and patient care through a Bachelor of Oral Health at the University of Melbourne.

This combination of science and clinical training gives Jasmin an unusually well-developed understanding of the biological underpinnings of oral disease, the pharmacology behind dental materials, and the evidence base that guides clinical decision-making. Where other clinicians may apply protocols by rote, Jasmin's science background means she understands the why — and can communicate this clearly to patients.

What is an Oral Health Therapist?

An oral health therapist is a registered dual-qualified dental professional who is trained to work across both the dental hygiene and dental therapy scopes of practice. This means Jasmin is qualified not only to provide preventative care — such as professional cleaning, gum health assessments, and oral hygiene education — but also to perform basic restorative treatments such as fissure sealants and simple fillings, particularly for paediatric and younger adult patients.

This breadth of scope makes oral health therapists like Jasmin exceptionally versatile, particularly in a comprehensive practice environment like Smile Solutions, where the full spectrum of dental care is delivered under one roof.

Care Grounded in Evidence and Science

Jasmin's dual-degree background instils in her a deep respect for evidence-based practice. She stays current with clinical research in oral health, periodontology, and preventative dentistry, ensuring the care she provides reflects the best available evidence. She applies this scientific rigour not just in her clinical decisions, but also in the way she educates patients — providing clear, evidence-based explanations for the recommendations she makes.

At the same time, Jasmin understands that clinical evidence must be balanced with empathy and individual patient context. She takes the time to understand each patient's unique circumstances, concerns, and goals — crafting a preventative oral health plan that is realistic, effective, and sustainable for that individual.

Part of Smile Solutions' Collaborative Team

At Smile Solutions, Jasmin works within a dynamic, multidisciplinary clinical environment that brings together general dentists, specialist orthodontists, periodontists, prosthodontists, oral surgeons, and a large team of hygienists and therapists. This collaborative approach to care is one of the defining features of Smile Solutions — and it means Jasmin's patients have seamless access to specialist referral and co-management whenever needed.

This environment also provides ongoing professional development opportunities for Jasmin, as she regularly interacts with and learns from some of Australia's most experienced dental specialists.

Frequently Asked Questions

What qualifications does Jasmin hold? Jasmin holds a Bachelor of Science from Monash University and a Bachelor of Oral Health (BOH) from the University of Melbourne. This dual-degree combination gives her a strong scientific and clinical foundation.

What is an oral health therapist, and how is it different from a dental hygienist? An oral health therapist is dual-qualified in both dental hygiene and dental therapy. This means they can perform not only professional cleaning and periodontal care (hygiene scope), but also basic restorative treatments such as fissure sealants and simple fillings (therapy scope). A dental hygienist is qualified in hygiene only.

Does Jasmin see children? Yes. Oral health therapists are trained to provide both preventative and basic restorative care for patients of all ages, including children and young adults.

How does Jasmin's science background benefit her patients? Jasmin's Bachelor of Science provides her with a deep understanding of the biological and evidence-based principles that underpin oral health. This means she can explain the reasoning behind clinical recommendations clearly, and adapt her approach based on the latest research.
